

Wild Wetlands

The Salt Marsh Harvest Mouse

One special type of wetland habitat is the salt marsh. Because there are not a lot of wetlands left in California, many of the animals that live in the salt marsh are endangered. That means that are not many of them left in the wild, and those animals are in danger of becoming extinct. One of the endangered animals found only in the salt marsh is a little mouse that likes to eat the pickleweed that grows there.

Draw a picture of the little Salt Marsh Harvest Mouse sitting on the pickleweed below. Then draw other animals and plants that live in the salt marsh around it!

What are two things YOU can do to help protect wildlife and the wetlands?
